RECORDERS

The Recorder is among the oldest of Musical instruments, it was certainly well known as far back as the eleventh century. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries Recorder playing was a marked feature of social and domestic life. The Recorder today is accepted as one of the most valuable adjuncts to musical education. Produced in its modern form is a combination of resonant plastic materials by up-to-date methods, the modern Recorder retains the simplicity of fingering and refinement of tone that have contributed to its popularity through the ages, and is, at the same time, easier to blow than ever it was in the past.
